You know, I love to travel. Do you love to travel? I think it's pretty amazing to go from one country to the other, meet different people, different cultures, eat different kinds of food, and just have the entire experience of so much variety of the world. For example last year I went first to England, I had like a party-weekend in England. It was really great. It was just Thursday until Monday there but I had a great, great party and met some old friends I knew from early visits to England. And afterwards in summer to Paris in order to practice my French and meet a bit French culture there, French people. And I really enjoyed my time there. It was really nice...it was really expensive. Paris is incredibly expensive, but it was a really, really nice holiday there. I really enjoyed my time. I had good conversations, felt really welcomed and spent a really, really good time with a lot of French people there.

I just came home from my annual vacations. It was amazing. I went first to Mexico and afterwards I went by plane to Guatemala and afterwards I went by bus to Belize and afterwards I took a plane to Peru. It was in total about three weeks and it was amazing. I had a lot of fun. I went surfing in Mexico at the coast. I ate a lot of good food. I met a lot of very, very nice people. I saw a lot of really interesting things. In Guatemala I met some really nice guys. Later in Belize a few days at the beach, just relaxing. And in Peru I went to the Andes and there I enjoyed mountains and really nice views, really nice landscapes. I had gorgeous vacations. I had really nice and beautiful vacations. But as well I'm quite happy to be back now after three weeks being away from home.
