You know, where I come from we have a lot of nature. I grew up in a small village and this village is surrounded by forests and fields and it is very beautiful. It is very close to the Alps, so I always see the mountains. It is very nice, so we frequently go to the mountains, just go for walks in the mountains, enjoy nature there, enjoy seeing a lot of animals and enjoy just fresh air. I also frequently go for runs in the forests. We have like kilometers and kilometers of paths in the forests. You can just run along and run along, loose all your problems, loose all your worries. It's very nice. There are a lot of birds you can hear them sing in the forests and on the fields you see little rabbits or from time to time you see other animals, dogs, cats. It's really nice. There are lots of lakes around the village. We can go for swimming in summer. This is nature. I really like it and really enjoy living in a small village and having the possibility to enjoy all that stuff around me.

I live in a big, big city. That is a big problem if you like nature. If you like going to the woods or spending your time outside in the fields or at least in your garden because here in the city there is nothing. There is no woods, there are not many trees, there are no animals at all. We have parks, well parks...very artificial parks. They have some trees and some paved paths and yeah some hedges...but in the end it's not nature. There is another big park with a big lake but it's an artificial lake. There's no life around it, no birds, no fish, no animals at all. No real trees. It's like one tree here, one tree there, one tree there. But it's far away from being real nature and I think that's why I need to leave the big city and find a more rural place for me to live, with nature, forests, lakes, animals. Just to enjoy a bit more nature and what it has to offer for our lives.
