When I was young, I used to play football almost every day. That was really, really nice. I had like tree, four friends and with this friends I met every day. We went to a nearby football pitch and there we played football, the entire afternoon, from lunch time to dinner time. Frequently our parents had to go and pick us up and tell us 'It's time to go home, it's time to have dinner' or 'Didn't you do your homework today?'. We never did our homework, mostly we spend time outside playing and enjoying ourselves and I think that was it worth, you know. It was being a child and we enjoyed it and we made the most of it.

When I was young, I had a bicycle. I rode the bicycle. I needed to go by bicycle because I lived in a very small town and i to move around in this small town, you had to go by bicycle because you couldn't go from one point to the other just walking because the town was too big for walking, but too small for public transport. And in order to see my friends I had to go by bike, every time. I frequently used the bike to travel from a to b and I was always outside. I was pretty well in shape because I almost made sports every day. I was going by bike, I was walking every day, I was moving around everyday. So this was, when I was young. Different times, different possibilities and different behavior all myself as well.

You know, Hedgehog, when I was young, things were better. We used to play outside. We went to the forests. We went to the fields, playing outside the entire day. We went to football pitches just playing football the entire day. Or we rode our bicycles. Or we went playing in the streets. We had like our inline-skates and we were playing street-hockey. What else did we do? We had a lot of fun. I meet every day with the kids of my neighborhood and we had lunch together in the gardens. We actually spent almost no time inside, like today playing the entire day with Play station or X-Box or with the computer. We went outside and entertained ourselves with small things but we entertained ourselves, we developed our imagination and used our imagination to play. And today? What do they do? They play computer.
